We'll look at:

- What is podcasting?
- When are they useful? Examples
- Where do we find them?
- Why make podcasts? - Supporting learning
- How do we make them?
- Resources
- Questions & discussion

What is podcasting?

- Combination of iPod + broadcasting
- Distributes multimedia files (audio, video, enhanced) for playback on mobile devices & personal computers - whatever suits you
- Listen like radio
- Access - as often as you like, wherever you like

Definition:

‘Podcasting is a web-based broadcast medium in which files are made available online in a way that allows software to automatically detect new files (generally via RSS), and download them.’ (Without this it’s and audio file but not a podcast)

‘A podcast can be thought of as an audio magazine subscription, in that a subscriber receives regular programs without having to remember to go & get them, and can listen or watch them at leisure.’

Sharing Your Community Around the World

Yesterday, 28 February 2008, 9:16:10 AM →

Students use digital cameras to capture pictures of their school and community. Pictures include: their houses, apartments or condo, their street, shopping plazas or malls, Grocery stores, Places of Worship, Schools, Businesses, Factories, City Government, Public Services & Parks, pictures of nature and seasons, etc. The pictures are then downloaded to iPhoto. Students can work together as a class or individually to create an iMovie telling about their community. Depending on the pictures students can discuss the apparent season that is visible in the pictures. In conclusion the movie can be sent to another class in another state or country. The pictures and iMovie can be shared via Distance Learning Capabilities.

Trip to Sacred Heart Cathedral

Posted by davefagg on August 10, 2007

Regular readers of this blog will know that I take my students on a one-off competitive fieldtrip around Bendigo, during which they use podcasts to complete tasks about the history of Bendigo, and hence, Australia.

However, I've got a particularly ratty (for the PC - energetic, students with different learning styles, cute) students and I need to get them out of the classroom more regularly. So, every 3 weeks we're going out on the public bus into town and spending an hour at various locations. We had a minor glitch when 5 students failed to turn up at the bus stop, and being a public bus we couldn't wait...needless to say it was a few students who I didn't mind leaving behind.

John took us around and was an excellent guide, and the students really took to the tasks. At the end, 2 students that we'd left behind turned up, and one tried to skateboard down the gloriously smooth and hard aisles of the cathedral! He had a quick exit.
